

MEET EDISON

THE OBERHASLI GOAT

Edison was named because of his incredible sense of curiosity.

- He will likely be the first to greet you at our barn.
- He loves to untie shoes, snuggle and give kisses
- He enjoys visiting with humans and experiencing something new

Edison is brown with darker stripes along the ridge of his back and face.

He has golden eyes and a rectangular pupil.

Featured Ambassador

Did you know that Oberhasli goats can have different coat colors? Just like you and your friends may have different hair colors, these goats range from lighter tan to deep reddish brown. The reddish brown color is thought to be the most desirable color. Rarely, and due to a gene mutation, some males can be born entirely black!

📍 Oberhasli goats originated in Switzerland.

Oberhasli goats were initially called Swiss Alpines. Males can grow to be 34 inches tall and weigh 150 lbs while females will grow to be about 32 inches tall and weigh about 120 lbs. They are considered a large breed goat.

DISCUSSION QUESTION...

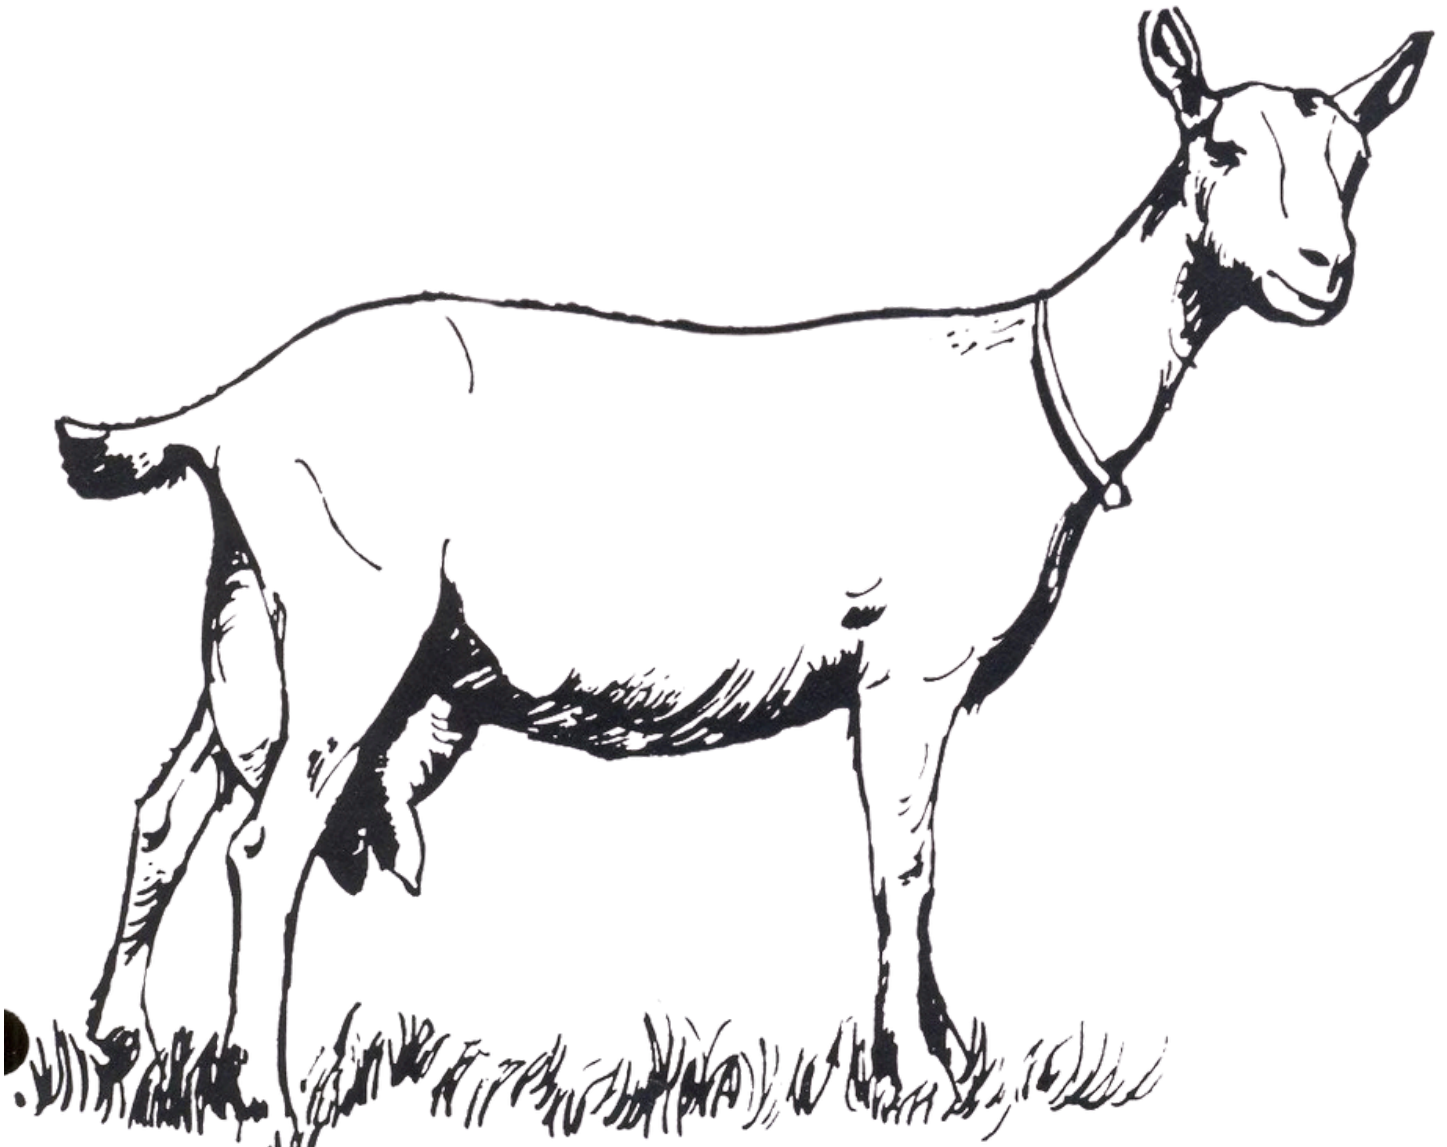

Edison came to our sanctuary at the very beginning as one of our very first friends. He has seen it grow and change, but through every season, he approaches new situations with thoughtful purpose and will even bow down to play with smaller companions.

When have you shown someone kindness?

Oberhasli's were brought to the US in 1977 and have been used as a dairy goat. People describe their milk as being most comparable to cow's milk.

Did you know that Edison came to us from a local dairy farm? His previous home felt he needed a place where he could be around people more as he just loved spending time with them.

Oberhasli goats are known for having two dark lines down the ridge of their nose and a dark line along their spine. Can you color this goat's coat to resemble an Oberhasli? Or can you color this picture in a way that represents you?

Learn about the school who created the sanctuary

Learn about the
Stardust Sanctuary